The Temperance Movement.

Fow people, unless they are keen students of the subject, realize the tremendous progress that the temperance movement is making. Without splurge, without the noise of bands or banners, but with a steady and increasing force, the opponents of the saloon are marching to victory. They hardly know their own streagth ly know their own strength.

In Georgia one county that was considered to be the home of the liquor interests shows 400 favorable to the salcon to over 1,600 against it on the ballot and people are amazed. The county in which Sam Small lived, and in which he had fought for years successfully to keep out the saloon, was raided in the interests of liquor after his death; that is, the saloon element determined to get a foothold. The temperance people themselves felt that, in the absence of Sam Small, their case was hopeless, and yet they won at the polls by more than ten to one.

No single Gough or Murphy is now sweeping the country, but rather thousands and thousands of men and women are constituting themselves the Goughs and Murphys of the present. The influences are quiet, but potent. The economic foolishness of drink is being shown. The Christian influence against the saloon is great. The faithfulness of woman in the fight is apparent.

To those men and woman whose persistence in the face of discouragement and oblequy have kept this subject ever before the mind and hearts of the people, the present must seem a harvest of great efforts and to their lips naturally rise that great battle hymn of the republic-

Mine eyes have seen the glory of the coming of the Lord,
He is trampling out the vintage where the grapes of wrath are stored,
He has loosed the fateful lightning of His terrible swift sword,
His both is muching. His truth is marching on

No Drinking Motormen Wanted.

The company which operates the New York subway system owned by the city has taken a radical stand against drink. "Take a drink and you lose your job" is in effect the dictum that has just gone forth. The company is now employing large numbers of new men and taking back many of the old employes who went out in the recent strike. The company has made use of the opportunity to take a firm stand against intoxicanis. All successful applicants for positions are required to sign a total abstinence pledge as a condition of their being employed. The company employs thousands of men .- Herald and Presbuter.
